About Me

I've always had an innate interest in breaking things apart, learning how they work, and putting them back together. My love for tech, solving problems, and challenging myself guided me towards the world of software development. I spend most of my free time learning new skills and trying new things. I've gained valuable skills during college and after graduating due to my constant desire to learn. I pride myself in my ability to pick up new things quickly and adapt to any environment, but I am most comfortable in a team focused and goal-oriented environment.
